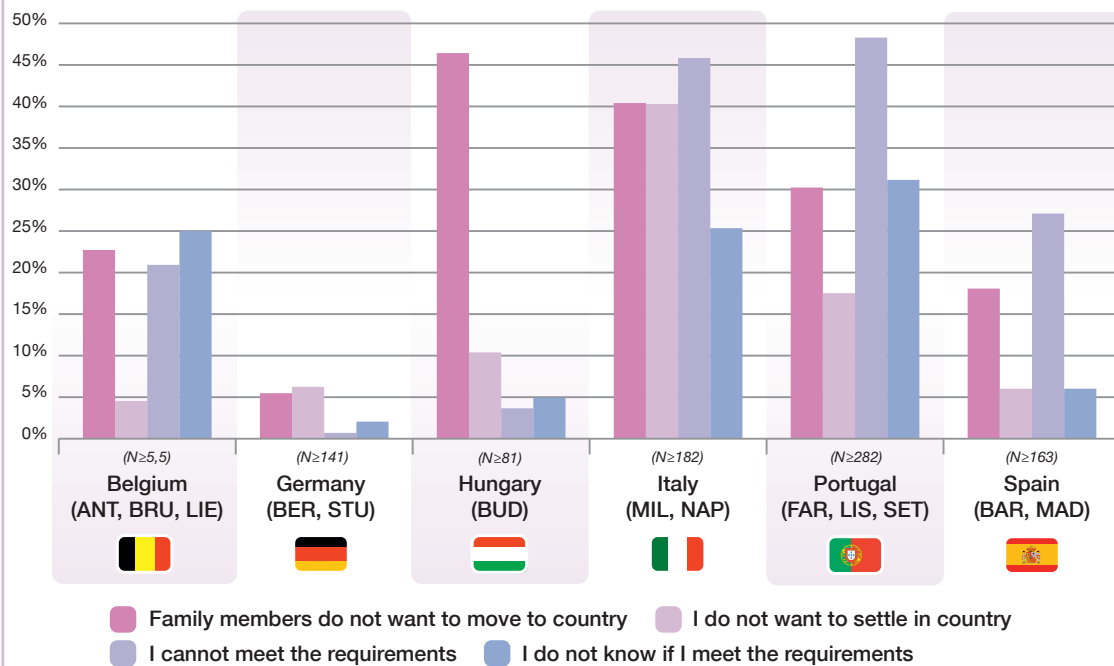

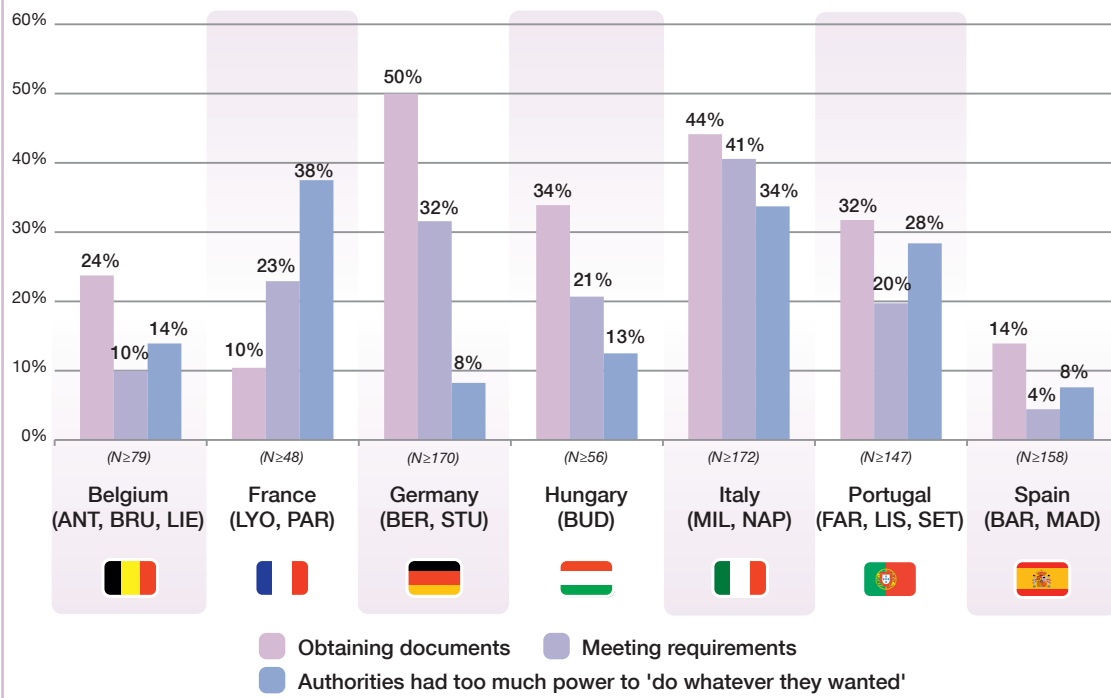

Figure 21. Why do you want to reunite with your partner or children?

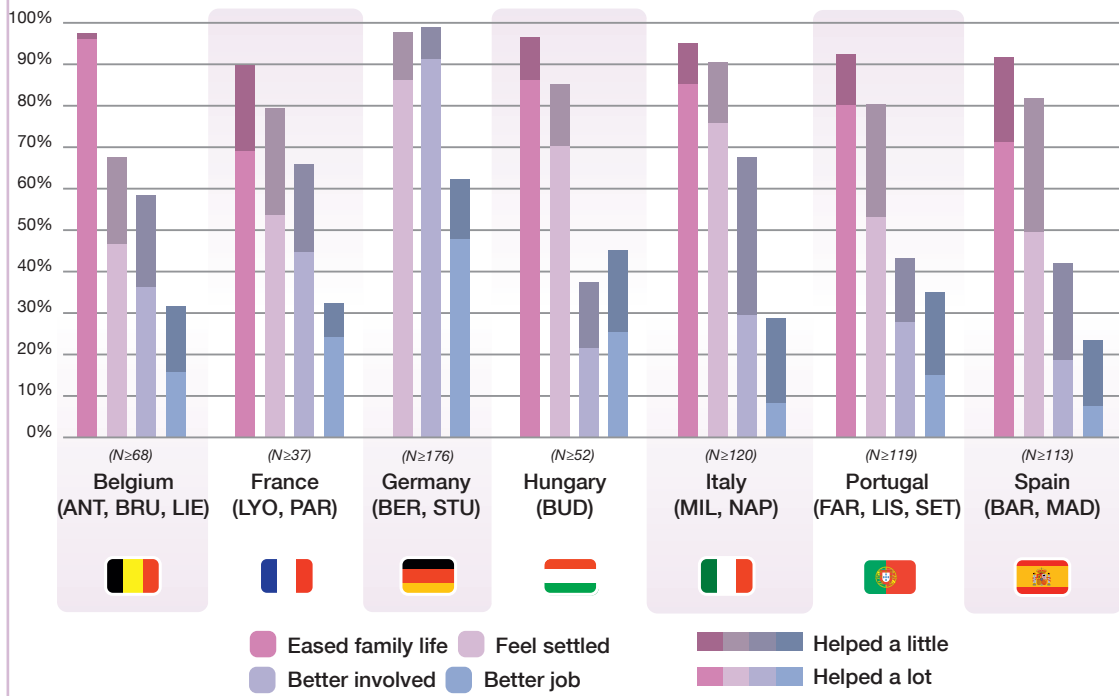

Note: Number of people in France who do not want to reunite (n=18) is too small for analysis. Statistical tests show that slightly more respondents cited the requirements as a problem in Milan than Naples, knowledge as a problem in Faro than other Portuguese cities, their settlement intentions in Faro and Setubal than Lisbon and their family's preferences in Stuttgart than Berlin, in Naples than Milan, and in Faro than Lisbon (for all differences: $p \leq 0.05$). The number of "Don't Knows" was high in Budapest (<32%), Belgian cities (<30%) and Paris (<11%) and Naples (<7%), while the number of "Refusals" was high in Spanish cities (<19%) and Belgian cities (<14%).

Note: Statistical tests show slightly more problems in Berlin than in Stuttgart with documents and requirements; in Milan than Naples with documents and power; and in Liege than Brussels with requirements (for all differences: $p \leq 0.05$). The number of "Don't Knows" was high (<30%) in Antwerp, Brussels, and Budapest.

Note: The question on family life was not asked in Germany. Statistical tests show slightly lower perceived effects of family reunion on jobs in Brussels than other Belgian cities, on jobs and involvement in Stuttgart than Berlin, on family life in Antwerp than other Belgian cities and in Lisbon than Faro (for all differences: $p < 0.05$). The number of "Don't Knows" was high (<37%) in Belgian cities and Budapest, while the number of "Refusals" was high (<15%) in Antwerp and Madrid.

Note: This pattern largely holds in most cases for all 7 countries, where sample sizes are sufficient for analysis. Regarding whether respondents would like to reunite with separated partners, the number of "Don't Knows" was high in Belgium (13.6%), France (6.2%), Germany (27.6%), Hungary (44.6%), while the number of "Refusals" was high in Germany (11.6%) and Spain (14%).
